In 1885 and 1886 lead and zinc had been found in Aurora, and so began the mining boom of the area. There was a quick need to organize the Bank of Aurora by 1887. Mansfield Taylor Davis and Jacob B. Miller kept the townspeople's money in a safe in the back of their mercantile store. Soon this wasn't feasible and in 1888 the Bank of Aurora was built on the southeast corner of Madison and Olive. It was the first brick building in the area. The old soft brick came from a kiln located northwest of town. Carr McNatt, the first president of the bank, practiced law, was Aurora's first mayor, and was a circuit judge. He passed away in 1923 after spending his adult life tending to the growing needs of our community.

In 1931 the Bank of Aurora closed due to the collapse in the American economy that became the Great Depression. The Bank was reorganized in 1935 with $31,000 in deposits. It remained at its location until 1969 when they moved up the street into their modern facility (which is now no longer a bank.) Our building has been the home to other various entities including the school system, a pet store, and even apartments. Eventually, pigeons called our bank building home.

In 1998 renovation had been completed, and the Bank of Aurora became the home for Bootleggers Restaurant and Brewery. The old bank vault was turned into a brewery, offices were turned into our kitchen, and Carr McNatt's office was turned into a dining room. A replica of the original teller cage is used for our front desk and cashier.

We would like to thank all of the people of Aurora and the surrounding area for all of their support. We feel grateful to be a part of this building's rich history.
